2.7.3 SQL. The sql engine uses the DBI package to execute SQL queries, print their results, and optionally assign the results to a data frame.. To use the sql engine, you first need to establish a DBI connection to a database (typically via the DBI::dbConnect() function). You can make use of this connection in a sql chunk via the connection option. For example:

The additional time could be due to Reporting Services rendering the report in addition to querying the data. For example if you have 55,000 rows returned for the report and the report server then has to group, sort and/or filter those rows to render the report then that could take additional time.
